Correlation Between Far-Infrared-Attenuated Optical Properties of Human Brain and the Knee Osteoarthritis Severity Index. Osteoarthritis (OA) is the most common joint disorder in the world, and it is estimated that almost 400 million people have the disease worldwide. Among the various complications of OA, knee OA is highly influenced by age. One of the most important reasons for knee OA is the failure to control the progression of knee OA by joint therapy. For such reasons, it is important to assess whether the degree of knee OA can predict the severity of knee OA. This study was conducted to evaluate the relationship between the severity of knee OA and the Far-infrared-attenuated optical properties of human brain. Seventy-eight knee OA patients who visited the Cheonan National University Hospital were enrolled in this study. The patients were classified into 3 groups according to the Knee Osteoarthritis Severity Index (KOSI), as follows: KOSI-0 (KOSI grade 0), KOSI-1 (KOSI grade 1), and KOSI-2 (KOSI grade 2). The Far-infrared-attenuated optical properties of both knee OA patients and healthy volunteers were evaluated with near-infrared (NIR) spectroscopy. The spectral data were analyzed using a partial least squares discriminant analysis (PLSDA). The spectral data from a trained predictor (PLSDA) were used to predict the KOSI grades. The root mean square error of prediction (RMSEP) and Pearson's correlation coefficient (r) were used to evaluate the quality of the PLSDA prediction model. With the P
